

Dr Therese Fish currently holds the position of Deputy Dean: Community Service and – Interaction at the Faculty of Health Sciences, University of Stellenbosch where she is responsible for strategic planning and leadership with regard to the integration of community service and interaction with teaching and research, development and extension of community service and interaction in collaboration with the Western Cape Health Department and other partners, responsibility for all agreements/contracts with partner employers, as well as other institutions in the public and private sectors, interaction and networking with national and international health departments, as well as other relevant statutory and non-statutory bodies, representation of the Faculty on the management structures of health service delivery bodies and the promotion and development of the strategies and policies for community service and interaction of the Faculty and University.

She currently serves on the board of Mediclinic South Africa and is the chairperson of the University of Stellenbosch's Business School's Alumni NPO Development Programme.